

JUDSON PRESS

PUBLISHERS SINCE 1824

BOOK PROPOSAL SUBMISSION GUIDELINES

Updated January 2011

WHO WE ARE

Our History

Established in 1824 as the Baptist General Tract Society, Judson Press has been known by many names and has published a wide variety of resources. Under the name of the American Baptist Publication Society, the organization produced tracts, Bibles, Sunday school curriculum materials, books, and denominational resources. In the interest of selecting an imprint under which it could market books and supplies outside the denomination, in 1922 the Publication Society registered the trademark Judson Press in honor of the missionary Adoniram Judson.

Since 2003 Judson Press has been the publishing ministry of the American Baptist Home Mission Societies, located at the denominational headquarters in Valley Forge, Pennsylvania, just 10 miles outside of Philadelphia. As part of the American Baptist Churches USA, Judson Press seeks to provide Christ-centered leadership resources for the transformation of persons, congregations, communities, and cultures.

While continuing to honor our long and distinguished history as a denominational publishing house, since 1922 Judson Press has intentionally sought to produce practical resources for the church universal. In keeping with our denominational identity, we are moderate in our theological position and passionate about contemporary social issues, including gender, racial, and environmental justice. Our resources are distributed nationally in local bookstores, Christian and secular, and via our website (www.judsonpress.com).

Beginning in the late 1970s, Judson Press has actively sought to publish resources for the African American church. Offering a diverse range of resources from early sermon collections such as Best Black Sermons to recent titles such as I'm a Piece of Work: Sisters Shaped by God by Cynthia Hale, Leading Your African American Church through Pastoral Transition by Ralph Watkins, and Deacons in Today's Black Baptist Church by Marvin McMickle, Judson Press is considered by many to be a recognized leader in providing nonfiction Christian books of African American interest. In fact, Publishers Weekly has declared, "Judson Press has long been the publishing authority on the lived experience of African American Christianity."

What We Are NOT

- A book packager
- A book distributor
- A subsidy or self-publishing company
- Exclusively a denominational publishing house

We Do NOT Publish

- Fiction
- Poetry
- Memoir or personal experience
- Doctoral dissertations
- Academic texts
- Curriculum
- Children's books

Our Place in the Industry

Judson Press is a small to mid-sized Christian publisher, producing ten to twelve (10-12) titles each year. We have more than 300 titles in print, ranging from our classic best-seller for pastors, The Star Book for Ministers, to the first volume in our new “Living Church” series, Making Friends, Making Disciples.

We are a traditional royalty press, meaning that we take responsibility for the editorial development, design and production, and marketing the book. Our authors receive a royalty earned on sales of the book—a contracted percentage of the net revenues.

Finally, Judson Press is a niche publisher. We do not publish “everything” nor do we attempt to be all things to all people. Like most smaller publishers, Judson Press focuses its energies on a specialized set of publishing categories, called niches. These are spaces we have carved out as Judson’s areas of expertise in the industry. Our primary niches are:

- Practical resources for the church and church leaders
 - Pastoral and sermon helps
 - Small-group studies

- Discipleship
- Christian education (not curriculum)
- Seasonal program resources
- Multicultural books, for African American, Hispanics, and Asian American Christians
 - Church resources
 - Sermons and preaching helps
 - Inspirational and Christian living
 - Self-help
- Baptist history and identity

Judson’s secondary niches include devotional, inspirational, and Christian living titles. However, in each of these secondary categories, we are looking for books that have a unique hook and a narrowed target audience—not titles intended for “all Christians” nor even “all Christian men” or “all Christian women.”

WHAT WE ARE LOOKING FOR

1. A compelling idea: It’s true that there is nothing new under the sun—including book ideas—but be passionate about your idea and be knowledgeable about the subject matter.
2. A unique package: The idea may be familiar, but approach it from a different angle or present the content in a different format (e.g., in a less-common genre, for a different audience, in a new medium, with humor, etc.).
3. A clearly identified audience: No book is for everyone, but every book is for someone. Think about the target audience for your project, including consideration of gender, race, age, health, education, and theological position.
4. A good fit for Judson’s program: Demonstrate a thorough knowledge of the place Judson Press holds in the industry and how your project suits our current publishing program.
5. A proactive author: Gone are the days when an author stays at home in introverted isolation. Like all publishers today, Judson Press seeks an author who is committed to being a full partner in the marketing and promotion of the book—online and in person.
6. Quality writing: Finally, we are looking for books that are well written, with engaging style and solid biblical content. Be sure to consider the appropriateness of your writing voice to your reading audience.

Ingredients of a Judson Press Book Proposal

- Working title(s): Ultimately, the final title will be selected by the publisher in light of marketing considerations, but a good working title catches the editor’s eye and imagination. Feel free to include 3-6 alternate working titles as well!
- Summary description: No more than one paragraph of 3–5 sentences, clearly establishing the unique and compelling elements of the project.
